Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Gleams of Scarlet: A Tale of the Canadian Rockies Night was fast approaching, the twilight, with its opal tints, giving place to a begemmed heaven. The wheat fields gleamed under the young harvest moon, while here and there bright fires illumined the scene, being a sort of aftermath of the stubble. For miles and miles the eyes of the traveler had viewed this expanse, treeless, flowerless, except for an occasional oasis of green where homes were located. The past two days had been a sort of wonderment to many, flying past those western homes. Now and then a little hand had waved them an informal welcome as the iron monster with its burden tore by before their always admiring eyes. Suddenly the train began to slacken its speed, and soon the conductor informed his people, as he good-naturedly called the Pullman guests, that they would have ten minutes to view the landscape o er. Come, my little lady, exclaimed a well-modulated voice, as a brown clad figure stood at one of the Pullman drawing-room doors, just time for a little ozone and a look at another huge bonfire before turning in.
