Lilhe ( 17 b) has thrown new light on the field of the biology of sex, demonstrating that sexual differentiation is controllable, at least to some extent, by a certain physiological factor. Lillie discovered that in the free-martin, the female of two-sexed twins in cattle, the sex-glands and sex-ducts are modified from the normal female condition to a sterile masculinized state; that in cattle twins an anastomosis of the umbilical blood-vessels exists between the two embryos, and that this anastomosis is responsible for the alteration of the female twin, the sex-hormones from the male twin being thus enabled to gain access to the female twin through the blood current and to produce a profound modification of her reproductive system. A histological study of the same material by Chapin ( 17) supported Lillie s conclusion that the free-martin is a modified female. As Lillie suggested ( 17 a), the possibility exists, however, that definitely planned experiments may enable us to regulate time and dosage of hormones better than is done in this experiment of nature; the results of such experiments cannot of course be foreseen. Such experiments will be necessary for the full solution of the stated problem. I therefore, at Professor Lillie s suggestion, undertook to perform such a series of experiments for the purpose of determining whether or not sexual differentiation is experimentally controllable through the secretion of the sex-glands. Gonads were grafted on the membranes of developing chick embryos in relatively young stages; such embryos were then allowed to develop further, and in cases where the grafts grew,...
