Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .up, generation after generation, as potters, the business being carried on chiefly at odd times in the winter, and, at intervals, in the summer during the making of crops. A small plant, typical of this country, is illustrated in Plates IX and X; it is located at Dent, a post-office in the interior of the county. Plate IX shows a primitive kiln, which, however, answers its purpose quite satisfactorily; and Plate X, the clay mixer. The products of this pottery are sold mostly by peddling, the articles being carried in wagons, so the writer was informed, sometimes to a distance of 75 miles, and disposed of, partly for cash and partly in trade. These potteries are located mostly in the vicinity of Dent, Pine Level and Gaillard s. Among the proprietors of different establishments, are Messrs. J. Becham, W. Becham, S. Becham, J. S. Newberry, J....
