Excerpt: .to hope that the vessel was not going to sink. All this while Captain Middleton and I conversed, and surveyed each other by the light of the spluttering, greasfed flame, that swung overhead in the spout of the coffee-pot lamp. But on a sudden my companion broke off from what he was saying to exclaim that the day had broken, and on looking up at the dingy square of skylight, to my great joy, I beheld the glass of it gray with daylight. We went on deck. The fog was as thick as ever it had been; the breeze blew strong, wet, and shrill over the bulwark rail; and the water, pale with the reflection of the mist, broke hollow all around the wreck that was sliding up and down the dim streaming sheets of brine, flashful with froth, so violently at times that I was thankful when Captain Middleton offered me his arm. I looked for my boat, and she lay sunk astern of the wreck, the water washing to her gunwales, and boiling over her and hiding her at intervals! I shuddered violently. My companion gazed at her with a grave face, and merely said, Well, things are always so, whether ashore or at sea--best as they are. Were I a sailor, I might draw you a notable picture of this dismasted collier, upon whose decks, which slanted to right and left, we stood gazing into the flying, steam-like thickness. On one...
