The Quarterly Reviewer actually rejects as not practical the question of the influence of Continental literature upon that of England. His reason is, partly, because English literature can never be studied properly, unless it be studied in connection with the literature of Greece and Rome, but chiefly, because it is not to be expected that a student should read, in addition to Greek and Latin, half-a-dozen other languages, and among those languages Anglo-Saxon and German (p. It is difficult to understand Mr. Collins position in regard to the classical couplet. He does not appear to recognize the existence of that metrical form as distinguished from the Elizabethan rhymed couplet. An instance of the rashness of his statements is this, that Geo Sandys wrote heroic couplets simply indistinguishable from Pope's couplets...
